My appleID get locked everytime i reinstall my hackintosh

Well it seems like Apple is changing something in their authentication procedures. I have 2 factor authentication enabled for my AppleID shortly after the release of HighSierra developer Preview I had the exact same issue (needless to say that I haven't changed anything about my smbios). I installed HighSierra developer Preview and afterwards in the process of creating the new User I was asked to enter in my iCloud credentials which I did. I got the 2 factor Notice on my iPhone that someone uses my AppleID on a new Mac with the option to allow or disallow. I allowed entered the code on the Mac and everything seems normal but directly after the User Account has been created and the Desktop came up I got an other Notice which stated that my AppleID has been blocked due to security concerns and that I need to unblock it...

This procedure repeated every time I installed an other copy of HighSierra for at least two days after it's release. The last time I reinstalled HighSierra (Tuesday I guess) it was gone I could sign up normally and my ID didn't get blocked again. I think it was something apple changed on their servers in the authentication Process which was fist buggy and is now fixed...
