Actually there are some problems regarding the activation of iMessage and Facetime on Hackintosh Computers. Even if all values set correctly the activation might fail and you'll get an popup telling you to get in touch with Apple Support to complete your activation since it failed. This behavior is directly related to your AppleID since very old ID's are able to activate iMessage or Facetime on most devices regardless if the values are setup correctly or not while newer ID's fail to activate the services even if plausible values are set...

At the Moment no one knows for sure which values need to be set and which patterns they have to follow to activate the services on non Apple Hardware...
